He went to McGill University after the war to complete his undergraduate training, and later trained in surgery. Dr. Young, who served as President of the Alberta Medical Association in 1956-57, was highly respected by his colleagues. After his death in 1981, one of them wrote: “I worked with this great and good man for 31 years as a medical associate. He was a true and sincere friend. Beloved by his patients, he was a fine and well-trained surgeon.”
